

On Jan 30, 2012, at 10:12 AM,

<http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/newsbysector/retailandconsumer/9048122/Agent-Provocateur-sales-boosted-by-US-First-Lady-Michelle-Obama.html>

Apparently, the story about Michelle could not be confirmed when investigated by an independent news website, and was denied by the White House. But now that it has been broadcast, it adds to the rationale for distain toward Obama, in some peoples head, even if not in the general public consensus. Few hear of the corrections, or care to. The politics of resentment continue.

There is an issue if only companies that cater to the very rich can thrive. However, to single out the first lady for populist scorn is very selective and partisan. The link below figures the claim of an extravagant buying spree is very unlikely, with math.

http://gawker.com/5880601/if-michelle-obama-spent-50000-on-lingerie-that-would-be-a-lot-of-lingerie?utm_medium=referral&utm_source=pulsenews

Dale